

The Decomposition of P
Peter Svenonius

Adpositional structures cross-linguistically can be insightfully decomposed into component parts with a consistent abstract compositional contribution to the semantics of the whole. In some cases, these parts can be seen to have morphological and/or syntactic effects. A detailed analysis leads to insights about linguistically relevant feature structures.